Annual Index of Interior Design Dissertations, Theses, and Creative Projects

Nam-Kyu Park, Ph.D., University of Florida

Periodically, the Journal of Interior Design (JID) has published an annual index of dissertations, theses, and creative projects to raise an awareness of scholarship being carried out at the graduate level in the discipline of interior design. This year is no exception.

In the spring of 2015, 65 interior design graduate programs in North America were contacted with a request to submit citations completed between June 2014 and May 2015. For inclusion in this issue of JID, 35 institutions reported a total of 259 citations (15 dissertations, 151 theses, and 93 creative projects), an increase of 45 citations from the previous year. Ten programs have experienced this year without any graduate works completed, and 19 programs have not responded to report their citations.

A comprehensive listing of submissions is presented by APA format. Doctoral dissertations are listed first, followed by master's theses and creative projects. By inviting you to review a wide range of interior design topics listed in this index, the JID's Editors and Board of Directors would like to celebrate the body of work created by graduate scholars.
